USA Tourism: Obama's National Travel and Tourism Strategy (NTTS)

The recent Voucher cloud USA Travel and Tourism Report outlines President Obama's National Travel and Tourism Strategy (NTTS) to increase America's desirability to tourists and make the US more competitive in the global tourism market.

Tourism is a key driver of economic wealth for some destinations and without tourism some destinations would suffer badly to survive, therefore, it is normally well planned out and where strategies are devised around it. To have a tourist travel to and stay in your destination for leisure or business purposes is important but to obtain repeat visits takes a lot of strategic thinking and well-planned marketing, and often it requires a huge presidential boost.

As a direct result of the presidential strategy to boost tourism and travel economy Brand USA now has global offices working with more than 20 countries with plans to expand their reach to cover 40 countries. The goal is to attract 100 million international arrivals by 2021 which they hope will translate into a direct spend of $250 billion. In order to meet these goals, the strategy focusses on 5 areas:

- Travel promotion to the US, which includes co-ordinated efforts using the technology, data and information available from the US government, and with their sponsorship.
- Improve the travel experience into the US by, amongst other things, improving the visa and arrivals process.
- Improve the overall visitor experience in the US, in part by training and development of the tourism workforce
- Better coordination across government agencies and the establishment of a national travel and tourism office at the Department of Commerce.
- Research and measure results using best case practices and measurement tools to gather information about ongoing travel behaviors.

The report also covers the details of future plans, like expanding the Visa Waiver Program to include more countries like Brazil and Poland, and to improve aviation infrastructure. This year, President Obama charged the Secretaries of Commerce and Homeland Security with producing action plans to improve the entry processes that are unique to each airport. He says "We're trying to make it easier for folks from around the world to come see America and spend money here." There are also plans to train US Border Guards on the cultural differences of visitors to America and make them more welcoming to improve the States' reputation around the world.
